Hi Marco,

Sorry, I am disturbing you again. Would you please just take a look at an article I am sending to you! I realize that it is very, very radical and it needs extraordinary courage to be published. But take a look at it first and whatsoever your decision please just reply to me!

Bests Wishes

George I. Vasilev

P.S. The article is also attached below.

A political game called democracy

World...Humanity...Motherland... Where are they? what are they?Do they exist really? (or is this just in our minds.) Is it possible to meet them, to touch them, or to say "Hello" to them?

In life one encounters people, interacts with them but never ever meets the world, humanity, or the motherland, fatherland. We humans are burdened too much with abstractions and distractions that we cease to relate to reality itself. We live through distractions and yet we live as if we are fast asleep. we should wake up to reality and realize that the man not the ideals, beliefs, any sort of ideological, political or religious, is more important than man itself or indeed life itself. However, political conditioning is such that people give in to such bombastic empty words automatically. This is just an indication of man's sleepiness. Such ways of backward thinking have been installed in us since the start of humanity, it even reduces men to animals fighting for territories, it seems man still has not yet overcome his beastliness, his animal heritage.

Obviously man has developed so far that he is half man and half an animal and evolution is still coming forth, otherwise such antagonism and atrocities in this the twenty first century is incomprehensible. it seems that for except for an outer change that has happened and is still happening through technology man's inner world remains primitive and barbaric regardless of how cultured and educated we are man still acts in the same way he used to centuries and even millennia ago - fighting. Only the methods have changed, these methods are now civilized, cultured and refined. Otherwise as far as domination ambitions of conquering destruction and killing concerned the tendency for it remains deep rooted within man. if it was not so man would not have to manipulate and dominate other men and man would not have to have been allowed to sacrifice each other for abstractions for all kinds of stupidities political or religious covered and decorated with beautiful and pompous words that politicians love so much.

And for good reason otherwise that vicious circle of nationalism, wars, vested interests would be diminished, and in the name of man man kills and has been killed -what irony! in the name of HUMANITY!!!! The worst of this is that people all over the world think " this is how it is and nothing can be done" and that wheel, the vicious circle continues to spin out of control.

Breakneck technological progress and globalization requiring constantly and rapidly changing life styles for most of us but prejudice and xenophobia is still prevalent in most of us., and if such inhumane, racist problem rises people are just waiting for the bubble to burst supported by some politicians like Trump in the US and the far right politicians in Europe and other mercenary politicians who are just waiting to take people for a ride. As we are seeing things are going from bad to worse any moment now the worst could happen the world is living on a razors edge and all because power in some countries is controlled by power crazy politicians.

The ancient phrase " Divide and conquer" should not have a place in politics now but as we are seeing nowadays that is exactly what is happening all over the world. The world is divided, antagonistic, rocked by terrorist insurgency, bathed in blood, warring for one reason or another and there are thousands and thousands of innocent victims. Young people, terrorists, suicide bombers indoctrinated radicalized killing themselves and many others including women and children for their causes or ideologies or any thing else, they deem worthy ideologies no matter what they are based on political, religion, racial or ethnic origins they are really a big NOTHING. The only valuable thing is a person's life that should be the most important thing to focus on ( that is only unsubstantiated words) but it is pushed out into the periphery of course displaced by regimes, ideals and of course, vested interest. Politicians call for peace then demonstrations occur then bloodshed happens and the unrest develops into civil war then of course the UN peacekeeping force become involved and paradoxically not peace but more and more antagonism then war begins and the circle closes.

Unfortunately this is the world we humans live in, and consider ourselves to be on the edge of civilization. We will always find a way to justify war crimes and regard them as inevitable. How else can we use diplomacy if not for that, but of course the truth is always on the side of the strong.

The same states and the law of the jungle, by the way there is another option it's a slightly different and softer method the laws of Moses which to the regret of many people consciously or not still remain true to this day.

Wars have always been a profitable business, but the terrorist ones are clearly preferable. Vague and dirty deals have always been done in this way, arms manufacturers are collateral and smugglers flourish in the long term. All this creates fertile ground for business which coincidentally are always hand in hand with legitimate enterprise. Yes, well politics and interests are inter related, there is no doubt that they are connected vessels, and this of course always stinks. Many politicians pretend to convince not only themselves but others that politics is not a dirty word, but that is the nature of the beast. But that is politics, its very intrinsic methods lies demagoguery its ancient Greek origin so beware we all know they say one thing and mean another or they talk a lot without saying anything substantial. And of course we all know that it is all about money, Money is power and power is money, and let none of us pretend it is not true. Is there one person in a poor country who would not like to take the step over into a richer one. The temptation must be immense but not all of them can stand there and not every country can keep them. Then starts the back room games the intrigue the maneuvers that almost certainly turn into small wars and they in turn escalate into larger ones. What else if not polices that are made behind closed doors and rules that are designed to make money and more money . In politics as in any business looking to get more and give less. Because at the end of the day it all comes down to interest that are all about money, money and lots of money.

Wars are nothing but a great clash of interests and a great deal of spilled blood, but so what if a handful of magnates want to add another billion to their billions. There is no doubt that the world is controlled by the super rich, they are the ones that have the controlling voice over world politics it is no secret to any one we all know that's the way it is. It is normal for the rich to get richer by their decisions to decide the fate of the people this is what we want or is it? It seems politicians only appear to play this game called democracy all citizens , communities and other organizations think they have a say whether directly or indirectly in the role of the government which of course is not case other than to sit in the dark and try to solve it. And the common people, or so called citizens are given the opportunity to choose or at least participate in this game called democracy,or are we?

Occasionally we will witness important parliamentary debates on television or even through referendums to resolve disputes among politicians. What can be more democratic than that? Really it's just dust in the eyes of the naives. Similarly referendums are just clever political moves nothing more nothing less, or is it the Machiavellian policy of modern day politics. What really was the Brexit referendum it was a manipulative strategy of a handful of ambitious politicians it only proved that people act mechanically, blindly but far away from choosing what they want, yes people do vote on their own but it is not all it seems to be. If we go on tracing the roots we will find the politicians who choose or impose their own will on others in a way we all think is democratic. Of course it's only a game, a political game which people have to play until they wake up to the reality and realize that life has to be respected in all its forms and that man should not be sacrificed for anything such as religious or political beliefs or for the sake of kill or be killed as in primitive times and then posthumously be rewarded and made a hero. Oh yes it's just a strategy, a very subtle strategy so all these so called political games can carry on and it will be continued, it all depends on man's capacity of waking up and realizing that all these obstructions, beliefs, ideologies and conditioning he lives through are nothing but toys which only maintains the game called Democracy which unfortunately man has to play.

Hi George,

I welcome the disturbance. I will definitely read the article. At the moment (all this week) I am dealing with an urgent home repair project, plus a few other commitments... I hope I will have some free time this weekend for some reading. I am also still looking forward to publishing your other piece on approaching life with love. All in good time, one step at a time. Thanks for your continued interest...
